THE CHICAGO COLISEUM.

Architect S. S. Beman has made pubic the plans of the great coliseum, in Chicage, in which the democratic national convention is to be held. The convention half proper occupies a space 450 by 300 feet at the north end of the coliseum. The speaker's stand and p atform for members of the national committee and 400 guests is located to the east and immediately in front will b desks for 250 reporters. These newslar platform, raised two feet above the delegates. Directly back of the speaker and in ready communication with no newspaper platform is the relegraph room, with tables for hundreds of instruments. Extending entirely around the building is a galry forty feet wide, toward which rise the rows of seats in the great amphi-theater. Two thousands seats are re--rved for the delegates and alternates T e seats slowly rise as they stretch back from the speaker's platform, and will be separated from the public scctions by a substantial railing. Thirteen thousand seats have been alloted to the public. A striking innovation is the grand public reception hall, 250 feet quare, large enough to comfortably hold 10,000 men. This is where dele-gites, alternates and spectators will mass before the sessions are called to order. The Coliseum is easily the larg-
